

2021 ANNUAL REPORT

DEAR CHILDREN AND NATURE CHAMPIONS,

Throughout 2021, the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic presented challenges, but it also led to increased interest in the power of nature to restore and heal. We were honored to work with partners, longstanding and new, to build on this momentum.

We deepened our commitment to the basic human right of every child to have a connection to nature – and we refined our theory of change to better accomplish this. We found new ways to support the incredible work of children and nature advocates around the world whose creativity, resiliency and dedication inspires us as a global force for the well-being of children and the planet.

With gratitude,

Sarah Milligan-Toffler President & CEO.

HOW WE WORK

We work to increase equitable access to nature everywhere children live, learn and play by changing the systems that impact children's lives, including city, school, early childhood, youth leadership and family service policies and programs. To drive systems-level change, we:

FOSTER BELIEF

that a connection to nature is critical for children's healthy development.

GROW THE MOVEMENT

of diverse, cross-sector, multigenerational children and nature leaders.

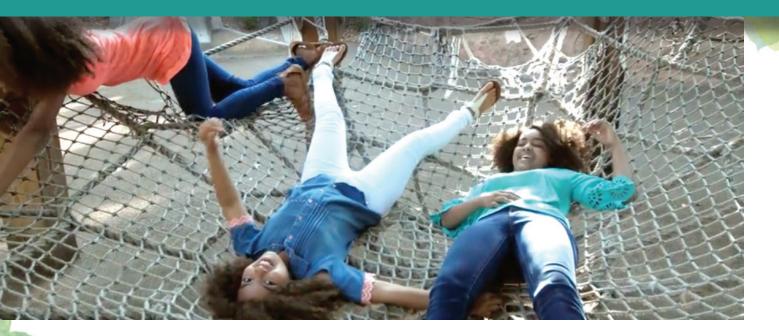

CHANGE CORE SYSTEMS

that impact nature connection in children's daily lives.

OUTCOME:

Equitable access to nature so that children—and the natural world—can thrive.

FOSTERING BELIEF

It all starts with belief in the power of nature to help children reach their full potential; that a regular connection to the natural world is essential for children's healthy development – and for the future of our planet.

To increase awareness of the proven benefits of nature, we curate the world's largest collection of research on human-nature connection and provide hundreds of practical resources in our online Resource Hub. We develop evidence-based tools and training for the children and nature movement and we publish Finding Nature News to share success stories from the field. We use a variety of strategies to connect children and nature leaders to the resources they need to make the case for their work

A YEAR OF FINDING NATURE NEWS

2021 marked the first full year of Finding Nature News, our bi-weekly online news publication that covers the people, programs and progress of the children and nature movement. Through both reporting and guest commentary, we share in-depth stories and inspiration for the field. Here are a few highlights from the year:

Improving diversity and representation in the outdoors, one photo at a time

People of color, people with disabilities and the LGBTQ+ community lack representation in most forms of media. In 2021, we partnered with Nappy Studio – a photography company on a mission to improve representation – to create a collection of stock photos featuring Black and Brown people in nature. We made the collection of photos freely available to help change the visual narrative about who spends time outdoors.

Today's challenges do not need to define our children's destiny

In this year-end review, author and Children & Nature Network co-founder Richard Louv reports on a growing mental health crisis brought on by the pandemic and the impacts of global climate change. He sees hope in the advocates "who work passionately to assure more and fairer access" to the healing power of nature, at a time when our children need it most.

Cities take the lead in transforming schoolyards with nature to help kids thrive

After a year of remote learning, closed playgrounds and a lot of uncertainty, one of the biggest lessons learned was the role that outdoor spaces can play in supporting children's learning and well-being. A group of cities across the country are using green schoolyards to enhance children's physical and mental health and academic performance, as well as the health and well-being of the surrounding community.

The physical, mental and social benefits of spending time in nature have become clear due to the accumulation of more than 1,000 studies. The data is clear and the pandemic has truly shown us how important our natural world is to our health and the health of our children.

MAKING THE CASE

In 2021 we surpassed 1,000 articles in our Research Library – and made the world's largest collection of nature connection research easier to access, search and categorize. With more than 60,000 pageviews per year, improvements to the tagging and search functionality of our Research Library connects organizations and researchers to the information they need to make the case for nature's benefits. We share the latest additions to the Library each month in themed Research Digests like these:

March 2021: Nature and art

Integrating nature and art in culturally relevant ways can promote children's nature connectedness and mental health.

ACCESS THE DIGEST

June 2021: Therapeutic use of nature

Studies highlighted in this Digest focus on the use of nature to achieve therapeutic goals. Different approaches and different populations served are addressed.

ACCESS THE DIGEST

October 2021: Nature engagement during early childhood

This Digest reviews the health, wellbeing and developmental benefits of nature engagement for young children, from birth through age five.

GROWING THE MOVEMENT

Turning today's indoor childhood – and our indoor society – back out to the benefits of nature takes a broad range of leaders, collaborating across sectors to drive meaningful change.

Throughout 2021, we supported children and nature advocates, leaders and practitioners through convenings, professional development and networking opportunities, and by developing tools and resources to support their work. Our goal is to grow and sustain an inclusive, diverse and robust movement – a network of networks that can drive change.

INSIDE-OUT LEADERSHIP SERIES

In 2021, we convened the children and nature movement virtually through the Inside-Out Leadership Series – a collection of capacity-building workshops, networking mixers, and focused discussions. These virtual gatherings provided ongoing opportunities for children and nature leaders to remain connected and inspired during the COVID-19 pandemic and to share strategies for keeping kids and communities connected to nature.

A highlight of our Leadership Series was a conversation with Children & Nature Network Board Member Dr. Gail Christopher and her daughter, Heather McGhee, author of "The Sum of Us: What Racism Costs Everyone and How We Can Prosper Together." The stirring conversation dove deep into the impact of systemic racism on the distribution of parks, equitable access to greenspace, and support for outdoor learning. More than 1,000 people participated in this important discussion via live and recorded webinars.

The Trailhead: The launch of a new online community for the children and nature movement

In 2021, the Children & Nature Network launched a free, online community for the children and nature movement. Trailhead users benefit from a general news feed, focused discussion groups and cohorts, and opportunities to connect and share directly with each other and more.

Nature Future: Kids' visions for a just and nature-filled world

We invited children and teens from around the world to share art and creative writing that expresses their love for the natural world, along with their thoughts, dreams, questions and concerns about the future. This online exhibit included a toolkit with lesson plans and tips for talking to kids about equitable nature access.

Collaboration by nature

What if we were to tap into the power of collaboration to bring groups of cities together for greater impact? That's the premise behind the new cohort of state and regional organizations that began receiving technical assistance in 2021 through Cities Connecting Children to Nature (CCCN), an initiative of the Children & Nature Network and the National League of Cities.

CHANGING CORE SYSTEMS

Longstanding systems of injustice have impacted how outdoor spaces are designed, distributed and programmed, calling for new policies and approaches to advancing equitable access to nature. We use a systems change model in our work to shift the conditions that hold inequities in place wherever children live, learn and play. We work with partners, leaders and advocates to change core systems through policy advocacy, technical assistance and peer-learning.

We first learned about systems change during a Cities Connecting Children to Nature all-site meeting. It's so helpful to see how other cities are doing this and to have examples to show our city leadership; for them to know that Austin isn't a one-off, but part of a larger national effort.

Global Lessons on Greening School Grounds & Outdoor Learning

What can the U.S. learn from other countries when it comes to greening schoolyards? In 2021, we launched the first phase of an 18-month project to find out.

Our Global Lessons on Greening School Grounds

© Outdoor Learning initiative, funded by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, will share case studies and data to establish a baseline of knowledge and a platform for advancing best practices for the green schoolyards movement in the U.S. and around the world.

Cities Connecting Children to Nature: The momentum grows

In 2021, our Cities Connecting Children to Nature (CCCN) initiative welcomed a number of new green schoolyards cities and state/ regional partners, bringing CCCN's nature connection strategies to nearly 36 sites. Despite, or perhaps because of, COVID, cities continued to prioritize nature connections and achieved significant outcomes.

Cities take the lead in transforming schoolyards with nature to help kids thrive

More than 50 cities and school districts applied to be part of Cities Connecting Children to Nature's Green Schoolyards cohort. Eleven were chosen, each with a demonstrated commitment from their mayor and at least one school board official. They are bringing green schoolyards to scale with support of the Children & Nature Network and our partner, the National League of Cities.
